

The State of Securitization from SFVegas

For those seeking perspective on the tailwinds behind the securitized products sector, it was evident at the industry's recent confab in Las Vegas. With more than 10,000 global participants from an array of industry roles, the attendance alone underscored the sector's position at the forefront of a rapidly evolving credit market.

Throughout our more than 150 meetings and numerous presentations, it was evident that the lines between banking and securitization, as well as public and private credit, continue to blur. The sector's expansion beyond borders was also evident given the overseas attendees and discussions regarding non-U.S. transactions. Of course, more immediate topics, such as valuations, consumer health, AI-related investments, and tariffs were also on participants' minds as referenced throughout the following perspective on the sector's various asset classes.

Key Takeaways:

- Valuations were a key theme, with general agreement among participants that spreads are tight across the entire sector.
- A strong desire to source opportunities - particularly in private, ABF-style transactions - remains.
- Issuance is also expected to continue at a strong pace across all sectors (Figure 1).
- In addition to supply and ABF opportunities, some significant credit trends were also discussed as consumer credit performance remains challenged in ABS, while CLO managers described navigating tariffs and other government policy initiatives.

Collateralized Loan Obligations (CLOs)

- The CLO market is contending with historic levels of issuance, and some discussions focused on operational challenges at this level of issuance.
- Managers remain focused on asset sourcing, which has proved challenging. Until M&A and LBO activity picks up, leveraged loan supply is expected to come from dividend recapitalizations and refinancings of private credit deals.
- With economic policy uncertainty ratcheting higher (Fig 2), managers are scrutinizing portfolios to identify and reduce exposure to issuers exposed to tariff and government efficiency risks. Industries most exposed to tariffs are not typically large allocations in CLOs.

CMBS, Specifically Data Centers¹

- Despite the recent headlines around DeepSeek and Microsoft's lease cancellations, sentiment around data center fundamentals remains positive (Fig 3). Regarding DeepSeek's impact, most market participants expressed the view that the increased cost efficiency will lead to greater demand. Power continues to be the principal constraining factor on new supply, with several operators considering on-site generation as a bridge solution.
- Capital and financing needs in the sector continue to grow. Operators have utilized a variety of financing structures including ABS, CMBS, project finance, commercial property assessed clean energy (C-PACE), and private syndications to date. With the recent widening in CMBS data center deals, ABS execution has gotten far more favorable.

Demand is measured by power consumption to reflect the number of servers a facility can house.

ABS

- Consumer credit performance is still challenged, with no clear driver for improvement. Most originators discussed tightening their “credit box” to cure underperformance from 2022 and 2023 originations.
- Issuance is likely to remain strong (Fig 3), with expectations of a steady supply of private opportunities from operators seeking funding diversification. Other operators are looking to expand traditional ABS issuance to complement early-stage private financings and warehouses.
- Bank card yields remain relatively high and challengers are looking to chip away at the profitable $1 trillion market. Even a small pullback from banks would create a sizeable opportunity. However, the buy now, pay later (BNPL) lenders will challenge banks for the same customer's business.
- Banks are increasingly competing with investors for lending opportunities (e.g., fleet, whole business securitization, equipment, aircraft), and this could compress spreads and limit available supply.
- The commercial/corporate sector is not experiencing any specific weakness by industry type and lenders are avoiding the lowest-quality credits within industries.
- Commercial/corporate origination volumes by issuers have generally seen steady growth and performance has not deteriorated except for select captive finance equipment issuers with farm economy exposure.

RMBS

- Insurance companies' interest in mortgage credit is especially evident in residential mortgage whole loans.
- Mortgage credit investors are monitoring the rise in non-qualified mortgage (QM) delinquencies, which are mostly stemming from the lower FICO and cash-out refi cohorts. However, these are not resulting in material losses due to low loan-to-value ratios and a strong housing market.

Investing in the bond market is subject to risks, including market, interest rate, issuer, credit, inflation risk, and liquidity risk. The value of most bonds and bond strategies are impacted by changes in interest rates. Bonds and bond strategies with longer durations tend to be more sensitive and volatile than those with shorter durations; bond prices generally fall as interest rates rise, and low interest rate environments increase this risk. Reductions in bond counterparty capacity may contribute to decreased market liquidity and increased price volatility. Bond investments may be worth more or less than the original cost when redeemed. Mortgage- and asset-backed securities may be sensitive to changes in interest rates, subject to early repayment risk, and while generally supported by a government, government agency or private guarantor, there is no assurance that the guarantor will meet its obligations. High yield, lower-rated securities involve greater risk than higher-rated securities; portfolios that invest in them may be subject to greater levels of credit and liquidity risk than portfolios that do not. Investing in foreign-denominated and/or -domiciled securities may involve heightened risk due to currency fluctuations, and economic and political risks, which may be enhanced in emerging markets. Currency rates may fluctuate significantly over short periods of time and may reduce the returns of a portfolio. Commodities contain heightened risk, including market, political, regulatory and natural conditions, and may not be suitable for all investors. Diversification does not ensure against loss.
